Granviller Meader was going to Newbury Center for a load and when near the crossing above Boltonville, a bey that was driving, seeing the west bound freight coming, asked Mr. Meader to take the reins as he was afraid he could not manage the team. After giving up the reins the boy jumped and except being stunned, escaped serious injury. The horses evidently became unmanageable running across the track just far enough to save themselves, the engine striking the wagon, badly smashing it and throw. ing Mr. Meader many feet through the air, striking on his head and crushing the skull in several places. He breather nearly an hour but was unconscious, The funeral was held from the house Saturday and was largely attended.
